Harold Ashford

Good morning, my great warriors.

I'm Ashford, your options mentor and the most reliable partner you could have in this crypto battlefield.

Whenever problems arise, don't rush to react.

Don't try to solve everything at once.

Let things breathe. Sometimes, after a bit of time, the situation turns around on its own.

The worse the situation looks, the more you need strategic composure.

Don't complain. Complaining is where clear thinking starts to collapse.

Last week, the U.S.–China trade war escalated again, hitting the global markets like a precision strike.

Nasdaq plunged 2.56%,

S&P 500 dropped 2.71%,

Dow Jones fell 1.90%.

It was a Black Friday bloodbath, and investors across Wall Street suffered heavy losses in what felt like a sudden ambush.

So, what changed over the weekend?

Did the storm intensify?

Or is the crisis beginning to ease?

That's exactly what we're going to face head-on today!

Last week, the government shutdown and data blackout triggered widespread panic across the market.

The U.S. dollar, gold, silver, U.S. stocks, and cryptocurrencies all surged together.

When every asset rises at the same time, it's not a celebration, it's an alarm. The system's already maxed out.

Then on Friday, a cliff-like drop suddenly hit.

Multi-asset reversal, markets plunged across the board.

Stocks recorded their biggest single-day loss since April 10.

Major tech stocks tumbled, wiping out more than a trillion dollars in market value.

Reality just slapped the market hard.

And before today's open, gold kept hitting new all-time highs, cryptos continued their multi-day rebound.

The government's been speaking up repeatedly, trying to ease U.S.-China trade tensions and pull the market back from deep fear.

Meanwhile, the market's whispering again about the TACO trading strategy.

Will the market buy into it this time?

Will Wall Street become the spark for the rebound?

Just now, all three major stock indexes opened sharply higher, rebounding more than 1%.

The tech stocks that plunged last Friday are leading the charge: $TSMC, $Broadcom, $NVIDIA, $Tesla, and $Oracle all posted strong rebounds.

The Philadelphia Semiconductor Index jumped 4% at the open, making a loud statement.

Sectors closely tied to U.S.-China trade like nuclear energy, rare earths, quantum computing, and storage devices, also turned green across the board.

But don't be fooled by appearances.

Gold and silver still top the gainers list, which shows the market's still in defensive, risk-off mode.

The panic hasn't truly faded yet.

Broadcom, which just announced its partnership with OpenAI, surged in early trading, becoming today's market benchmark.

I have to remind you: with too many rotating sectors and uneven trading volumes, upward momentum could easily get diluted.

Stay calm. Stay sharp.

This week's uncertainty hasn't gone away.

This isn't confirmation, it's just a test.

Let the dust settle before making your move.

Right now, investors across the U.S. are facing one question:

Keep waiting, or start bottom-fishing right away?

Don't rush, we'll cut to the chase.

What pierced the stock market's defenses this time was China's export controls on rare earths.

But be clear:

Rare earths are one of the few trump cards China still holds. So why strike now?

1. To gain bargaining leverage.

Facing tariffs, TikTok pressure, and Taiwan, China was pushed into a corner and had to act to win negotiating room.

2. Domestic substitution is already in place.

Under U.S. blockades and tech containment, China's achieved self-reliance in the core links, so it doesn't need to make concessions to the U.S. anymore.

3. Global containment is escalating.

U.S. is squeezing Chinese manufacturing exports and energy imports. That directly threatens China's national security, so China has to hit back, and this is a prepared, deliberate countermove.

4. Trump's negotiation strategy has completely failed.

The Chinese government has fully seen through the Trump team's playbook, no credibility, totally unpredictable, signing deals only to tear them up later, making promises they never keep. This behavior has completely exhausted China's patience.

5. The U.S. government shutdown gave China the perfect opportunity.

This round of the shutdown, combined with the escalating partisan battle, created a golden window for China to make its move. From Beijing's perspective, this is the perfect moment to weaken Trump's negotiation leverage, because it directly affects the midterm elections. Trump's team will have no choice but to lower its posture and cut its bargaining chips.

This isn't a minor test.

It's a strategic, precisely timed counterattack.

The market's only beginning to feel the first tremors.

So far, we still haven't seen a strong response from the White House.

That proves this time, Trump team's feeling some real trouble.

Rare earths aren't just raw materials.

They're the backbone of semiconductors, defense, and AI technology.

If the U.S. loses access to China's rare earth supply, there's simply no way to replace it in the short term.

Here's the real question:

How will the Trump administration handle this rare earth crisis?

It could directly impact the pace of America's AI industry development, and might even rewrite the entire narrative around tech stocks.

Now the real choice is right in front of us:

Do you bet on a rebound in tech stocks, or position yourself strategically in rare earth plays?

We've covered the external shock, now it's time to focus on the internal risks within the U.S.:

The government's still shut down, and the economic damage keeps spreading.

Layoffs are widening, and core employment data hasn't been released.

The CPI report's delayed until October 24, and the Fed's rate-hike path is getting blurrier by the day.

These stark realities don't line up with the market's optimism.

So what's really driving this market, genuine confidence, or just the thin story of an OpenAI partnership holding things up?

We have to make one thing clear:

If Trump administration fails to stabilize the situation this time, how much longer can the tech-stock narrative really hold up?

From what I've heard, China's already taking action.

Google and NVIDIA are now under antitrust investigation.

Google: 40% of its global market share comes from China.

NVIDIA: China is its third-largest customer worldwide.

You think the storm's over?

The next targets could be Apple and Tesla.

This isn't a threat, it's an escalation.

And if you want to take part in this round of the tech rebound, you'd better make the right call.

Right now, the market's betting heavily on one thing:

TACO trade.

TACO = Trump Always Chickens Out

The term was coined by The Financial Times and has now gone viral across Wall Street and the investment community.

It means Trump always talks tough but backs down when it really counts.

So stay calm. Watch carefully. Be patient.

Don't rush to bottom-fish, and definitely don't pay for those far-fetched tech stories.

Because this time, without real consequences, no one's going to sit down at the negotiation table in peace.

What you need to do isn't follow the market, but anticipate the next real turning point before it happens.

If you enter now.

You're probably just taking someone else's position, standing guard for their exit.

I'm not denying the long-term value of tech stocks.

I'm just reminding you to stay calm and wait for the right moment.

This week, all eyes are on the new earnings season.

But based on past experience, when tech stocks lose their leadership, no earnings report can ignite a new rally.

Today's short-term strength is likely just the market digesting the tail end of rate-cut expectations. This week's bound to be volatile.

Meanwhile, gold has already broken past the $4,100 mark.

That's not a sign of excitement, it's a sign of high alert.

Be patient. The real turning point is getting closer.

When the wind truly shifts, that's when you make your move.

This week, whether it's the stock market or the crypto market.

I've only got one thing to say:

Take profits when you can, don't overstay the battle.

Stop dreaming about long-term positions.

The potential risks in this market are way bigger than you think.

At the same time, Partner Investment Program has officially entered its final countdown.

October 15, that's the full deadline.

These final three days.

If you still want to push for that last wave of profits.

If you're aiming to exceed your goals.

This is your final window.

Especially for those who just went through a “baptism” in the stock market.

You've got to take back control.

Right now, rhythm is everything.

You've got to move faster, act decisively, and stay proactive.

Treat every signal with full engagement.

Every profit you make becomes an accelerator for your compounding growth.

Don't fall behind. Stay laser-focused on the group updates.

This week marks the ultimate showdown for every partner.

As profit realization speeds up, all the following key resources are about to enter their contract execution and lock-in phase:

LX Mind System presale

Regional agent partnership negotiations

Million-dollar medical protection plan

AI Foundation entry invitations

And your results and positioning this week will directly determine your future level of wealth, the breadth of your life, and the height of your family's legacy.

It will decide who you will become, and what kind of life you will live.

This isn't just the final chapter, it's the beginning of a new one.

A new era of wealth that belongs to you, a new life blueprint, a new personal coordinate, starts right here, right now.

Everything from the past resets to zero.

Everything in the future is under your control.

Let's move forward with conviction, give it everything we got, and sprint to the grand finale!

And from my 30 years of investment experience, let me tell you this, it's never too late to reinvent yourself.

No matter how many setbacks you've faced, no matter how tough your situation feels right now, you always have the right to rewrite your own story.

Don't slack off, let's dive straight into today's session!

Donald J. Trump ✓ +

@realDonaldTrump

Don't worry about China, it will all be fine!
Highly respected President Xi just had a bad moment. He doesn't want Depression for his country, and neither do I. The U.S.A. wants to help China, not hurt it!!! President DJT

Last Friday, global markets were hit by an unexpected shock.

And yet, today, it's as if nothing ever happened.

Let's take a moment to review this dramatic plot twist from start to finish.

Last Friday:

China's Ministry of Commerce suddenly announced new approval and control measures on all rare earth products with a purity level of 0.1% or higher.

Shortly after, Trump fired back: "China's move caught us completely off guard. We'll impose a 100% tariff on Chinese goods!"

Saturday:

China's Ministry of Commerce quickly clarified that the rare earth export controls did not mean an export ban, and called on the U.S. to return to the path of dialogue.

Vice President Vance then added, urging China to stay rational amid the escalating trade war, and claimed, “President Trump holds the stronger hand.”

This Monday:

Trump suddenly reversed course, saying, “Don’t worry. We and China just had a little misunderstanding. We’re trying to help China, not hurt China.”

In just 48 hours, the market staged a breathtaking drama.

Trillions of dollars in market value evaporated overnight, only to rebound again.

Countless investors didn’t even have time to react, before they knew it, they’d already lost everything in the storm.

Yesterday, after a sharp plunge, the crypto market saw a strong rebound. BTC after falling below the key 100,000 mark, quickly reversed and climbed back above 115,000, Ethereum also rebounded sharply from 3,500, returning above 4,200, bringing a brief sense of relief to the market, but not yet a true return of confidence.

Today, US stocks opened high and continued to rise.

Dow Jones gained 1.29%, the Nasdaq rebounded strongly by 2.21%, and the S&P 500 recovered 1.56%.

On the surface, market sentiment appeared to warm rapidly, with semiconductor, precious metal, power, and energy storage sectors leading the gains.

However, the real key lies in the details.

From today's trading volume, buying pressure remains weak. Prices rose, but capital did not truly flow in. The market is still clouded by caution and hesitation, and most investors continue to choose observation over action.

Looking at the seven major tech stocks, aside from Tesla's rise of more than 5%, most others only showed an inertia driven rebound, without signs of major inflows or active institutional buying.

This reveals one thing:

After last week's violent fluctuations, investors risk awareness has reached a new level.

Short term technical rebound does not mean the crisis is over.

Market remains deeply concerned about policy shifts and the escalation of trade conflicts, and such crises are unpredictable and extremely damaging.

Just before today's market close, I saw several partners discussing passionately "If only we had caught that BTC crash and then gone long right after, that would've been the perfect two way harvest!"

Stop dreaming.

In this world, who could have precisely shorted last Friday, then flipped long exactly at the bottom?

Rumor has it, only one person did, Trump's youngest son.

It is said that he positioned short perfectly before the plunge and eventually made over 80 million dollars in profit.

That is what a real master looks like, he doesn't study the market, he manipulates it directly.

His father, with just one sentence, can shake the market. With a single tweet, can trigger massive turbulence, never missing a shot.

At this moment, he is enthusiastically attending an event in Israel called the "Peace Conference," proudly boasting about his so-called "great diplomacy."

Yet the market has already been turned upside down by him.

It seems that in the Trump era, uncertainty itself has become the biggest label.

Today, the long-awaited “TACO rally” arrived as expected.

But for ordinary investors who have just experienced heavy losses, the more critical questions are:

- Should we chase this rebound now?
- Will another “black swan” like last Friday appear again?
- Can China’s “rare earth card” really force Trump to compromise?
- And is his team already planning a tougher counterattack?

Let me make this very clear:

No one can accurately predict when the next storm will strike.

History never repeats itself exactly, but it always marches with the same rhythm.

Right now, China's precise control over rare earth, is quietly becoming one of the most critical variables in the global supply chain game. This is no small matter, it directly affects the core lifelines of the automotive, defense, aerospace, medical, and semiconductor industries.

If we want to fully break through China's blockade, we must start now, laying the groundwork for technological independence and resource reserves for the next decade.

But we must also stay sober minded:

From talent selection and project approval, to technological breakthroughs, practical implementation, mass production, and widespread adoption, this cannot be done in a few months.

It may take ten years, but it will never be done in ten minutes.

It is becoming increasingly clear that the trade war is quietly evolving into a rare earth war. It is overturning a script that the United States has dominated for decades.

This is not only a race against time, but also a contest of wisdom and endurance, a deep strategic struggle for balance.

Any expectation of a “short term miracle” is an unrealistic illusion. Only by trading interests for time, advancing technological innovation, and promoting resource substitution step by step can the deadlock truly be broken.

Today JPMorgan Chase released major news:

Bank will invest up to 10 billion dollars directly in selected companies to enhance their growth potential, drive innovation, and strengthen strategic manufacturing capabilities.

CEO Jamie Dimon was blunt:

“US is overly dependent on foreign sources for critical minerals, products, and manufacturing.

Immediate action is necessary.”

This 10 year plan, with a total scale of 1.5 trillion dollars, aims to rebuild America’s security and resilience in key industries.

The plan focuses on four core areas:

supply chain and manufacturing, defense and aerospace,

energy independence & resilience, and frontier and strategic technologies.

At the same time, JPMorgan has further divided its focus into 27 sub-industries, covering key sectors from shipbuilding and nuclear energy to nanomaterials and critical defense components.

This is not just a capital injection, it is a strategic declaration: US is preparing to reclaim its industrial sovereignty.

It marks the beginning of a systemic counteroffensive driven by both national will and financial power.

This time, it is no longer a simple bet on technology, but a bet on the underlying support system behind technology, the full chain independence from basic materials to advanced manufacturing.

Therefore, investors do not need to keep worrying about whether to buy high priced tech stocks. A greater opportunity or rather, a broader track maybe emerging.

Today, I have already noticed that stocks related to iron ore mining and deep processing, electricity, and lithium batteries have begun to move. The market is using its keenest instincts to capture the signals of this structural shift.

But I must remind you:

most of the stocks moving now are small cap companies. Their prices are highly volatile and already pushed up by sentiment.

The real Wall Street capital deployment. will quietly take place in those mid sized leading enterprises that are not yet widely noticed. These companies have technological depth and production capacity, able to support both national strategy and long-term capital positioning. They are still far from their true breakout moment.

So remain patient, when the market finally settles, that will be our best time to strike.

This month, China has played a powerful card "rare earths". It instantly triggered global attention on critical raw materials.

From what I understand, the reason China dared to make this move now is that it has already achieved substantial breakthroughs in key technology sectors.

In the second half of the month, even more significant news may arrive.

Will it be a breakthrough in lithography machines or in chips? We do not yet know.

But one thing we can say with absolute certainty, in times of policy swings and frequent economic missteps, it is essential to plan and allocate assets in advance.

No matter how much uncertainty lies ahead, we will always remain your strongest support.

Starting last week, Partner Program has officially entered its final countdown.

Yet our profits continue to accelerate, further expanding every partner's lead.

Because we firmly believe, true wealth does not come from wild surges or sudden collapses, but from foresight and perseverance in following the trend.

We do not chase highs or panic at lows, we do not speculate on political directions. We focus only on high probability short term trades and the steady compounding of returns. We build our advantage through volatility and achieve growth through trend alignment.

Urgent notice: the latest trading signal has been released.

All partners, execute immediately.

In this era of turbulence, hesitation is the most expensive cost. Market will not wait. Capital will not wait, and real opportunities will never wait.

If you are still standing on the sidelines at this moment, what you are losing is not just profit, but your position and initiative in the next market cycle.

Stock market will not stay volatile forever, and tech stocks will not remain at their peaks, “rare earth war” is quietly giving birth to a new wave of national level strategic investment opportunities.

And for all of this, there is only one thing we must do: earn more, build reserves, and be ready for battle, right?

Now is the noisiest, most chaotic moment in the market.

But precisely because of that, it is the moment that tests your focus, conviction, and execution the most.

As long as you give your full effort and push through the Partner Program, achieving your target, or even exceeding it, what you gain is not just your current profit, but the strongest foundation for seizing the next wave of opportunities ahead.
